The official count for Christian county was made Friday and the unofficial figures were swelled about 20 votes on the Republican side. This was done by counting defective ballots returned without statements attached to them. At Gracey alone 14 such ballots were counted, all but one for the Republican ticket. These ballots have been held to be illegal since the point was raised by Judge Landies in the count of 1899. Of course the twenty odd ballots counted illegally do not materially affect the vote, but the action of the two Republican commissioners in counting ballots decided by the Court of Appeals to be illegal, go to show that there can be no correct count in Christian county under the present law. The revised figures appear in the table above.

FEAR NOT.

Fear not, the flowers are saying,
When they look beneath the snow.
For the spring will come to-day,
With the sweetest buds that blow;
The snow shall melt, but not the crimson,
And the violet her blue.

Fear not, for spring is coming
To you, dear heart, to you.
As they fly from pole to pole,
Where the winter winds blow;
There the kinder seasons roll;
The snow shall be shaking
The blossoms of the dawn.

And the dove through his complaining Tried a heart to soothe and win.
Fear not, the squirrels chatter
As they frisk through foresta lone,
To the winds in monotonous;
Though the woodland is forsaken
Of frost and bird and bee,
The silence yet shall waken
To summer melody.

Fear not, ye timid-hearted,
There is no trouble here,
For across snows departed
Returns again a spring;
No fears that come to vex us,
No evils that befall,
Can linger to perplex us,

A HEAVENLY WOMAN.

BY KATHARINE TAYLOR.

I looked on at that rout like a man in a dream—so strange did it all seem to me, who had been long absent from such festivities. It was five years since my adored Georgiana had left me, taking with her the little fruit of our love, and for so long I had not revisited the glimmers of the moon. Indeed, I had not been here now but that the rout was for the new hospital, and my friend Dean Delany had persuaded me to it, saying that it was something that my angel would have exacted of me, and that she would not have me lay down the duties of my station because the Lord had taken her from me.

I knew the dean thought that my resolution had lasted long enough; yet never was small town so painfully from his shell as I from my house.

I caught sight of myself in a mirror in the bathroom, and marvelled that the anguish of that time, the loneliness of the years, had not made a more enduring mark upon me.

I was dressed finely—like a bridegroom. I mocked at myself. My nasal Patrick had seen to that, and had had the tailor to me and the perruquier and there I was in pearl gray silk from head to foot, and my wig curled finely, and a hint of essence about me—I, whose heart was as dead as any man's might be while his body lived.

Suddenly my attention was arrested by the vision of a lady who sat in a gilded chair immediately facing me across the ballroom.

I thought I had seen her before, yet surely she was different. I remembered a being of an innocent and bewitching milkmaid beauty who had been like her, yet unlike. I could imagine a veil in the evening drawn over the morning who would have my lady as her saddened beauty appeared by that memory of milk and roses.

Some one stepped into the window by my side. It was the dean.

"Still here, my Lord Ralphy," he began.

"Who is that lady?" I asked, indicating the face that had just arrested me.

He did not look at me in curiosity as other might.

"That heavenly woman," he answered. "Why, she is Mrs. Bathurst. Don't you remember that she was Caroline Dillon, little Caro? She married Harry Bathurst, who was killed in the war with Black Standish the year of your marriage."

I remembered the bright thing then, and my heart smote me. It was not so long from her calamity to mine; and I had forgotten hers.

"She was fond of her husband?" I asked.

"She worshipped him. The manner of his death, too. He fought the Bull for a day and a night, and generous thing to do but it entangled him in his wife's affections, whence perhaps life might have disposed of him."

"He was a charming fellow," said I.

"I have only known one man good enough for Caro," replied the dean. "But come, she is looking our way. Like yourself, she is lonely at this feast. I dragged her from her retirement for a seat for her, and when she had taken it I stood looking at her where she glimmered white in the dark. I spoke then as I had not intended."

"So you would slip from me into a convent?" I said, and I knew there was fury in my voice.

"I have had thoughts that way," she said, "in the days of my unhappiness. The heavens would be good to me. I am so alone."

"That you are not," said I; and suddenly I took her sweet young form in my arms and felt her heart room for two, so that we must needs leave them. Now can I say I found it a hardship, because, after the silence and despair of these years, it seemed the most useful thing to lay it all bare under the deep, compassionate eye of that heavenly woman, and to hear how she had suffered as I had done.

We had been friends now for some months; and if it were not that I had gauged the great soul, the deep calling to deep, of a woman's tenderness, I would have marvelled at how she gave me with both hands of her sighs and sympathy. We never tired, indeed, of each other's society; and often when it was time for us to part we stood up and looked in each other's eyes blankly, not having realized how time had flown.

One day we were to ride to Lucan, to take the waters, with Mrs. Delany in her coach; but when I had come to Delville neither Mrs. Bathurst nor the dean were present.

"Come, come," said Mrs. Delany, rallying me, "your countenance is too candid, sir. You must bear with me for the journey."

I assured her that I was most flattered to be her squire; and indeed, it was true, for my old friend's wife was a charming creature—one of the elect company of women who make a little heaven on earth.

Our day was a happy one, and, to my amazement I found myself laughing heartily at the play of the two young daughters of the house, who, while we regaled ourselves with strawberries and cream under a chestnut on the lawn, took to flinging rose leaves upon each other, and even entered into their play, flinging my handful of fragrance so they knew not where it came.

But as we drove back to town in the afternoon Mrs. Delany let fall a speech that seemed to thrust me into the cold and darkness from which I had but lately emerged.

"It is a pity to make a nun of her," she said.

"Of whom?" I asked, staring.

"Why, of that heavenly woman. I fear that she has it in her mind. She is at the convent often than at home. She has not confided in me, but I fear she soon will."

I turned cold with apprehension. A world without that heavenly woman! It was unthinkable. Then a blind rage seized me, and I felt that I could break all the bars in the world that divided me from her. I felt that my eyes were suddenly inflamed—like my heart.

glanced at Mrs. Delany and saw that her red lips smiled. I could scarcely trust myself to speak, and when the words came I knew my voice was husky.

"I would be a great sacrifice," said I.

"If we could make her feel that she had a work to do in the world," Mrs. Delany responded. "I confess the dean and I would be in despair the loss of that heavenly woman. But we are a selfish couple. She does not feel herself necessary to us. If she could feel that there was some one who could not do without her!"

"There is some one," I said, half under my breath.

"Ah!" Her eyes were dewy, but still the soft scarlet of her lips smiled. "Do you know what your friends are saying? That you are too miserable to do without each other. But remember—the dean and I are in mine—once she passes the postern of the Poor Clares 'twill not be easy to dislodge her. She is a thing with a will and a purpose."

"She shall not pass them," I said.

After supper Mrs. Bathurst and I found ourselves, as usual, alone. Those two lovers, the dean and his lady, had been separated the length of a day. They had much to talk of, and we saw them take their way to their little seat out in the ivy which only held them two.

The sky was in long streaks of rose and amber, with quiet water spaces of green between. A young moon looked slowly up the sky. At the moment it was tangled in the boughs of an ancient apple tree. We went down the terraces through the kitchen garden to the hayfield, where the hedges were white with rows. I hoped some for a seat for her, and when she had taken it I stood looking at her where she glimmered white in the dark. I spoke then as I had not intended.

"So you would slip from me into a convent?" I said, and I knew there was fury in my voice.

"I have had thoughts that way," she said, "in the days of my unhappiness. The heavens would be good to me. I am so alone."

"That you are not," said I; and suddenly I took her sweet young form in my arms and felt her heart slutter against mine. Why, what had happened to mine, which I had thought to be dead, that it was sprouting and germinating with green life and hope?

"Because I am so miserable," she said, her lips set warm from my kisses, "we belong to each other."

"Because God gives us a second chance," said I, "and would not shipwreck us again."

"They will not grudge us that second chance," she whispered.

"Nay," said I. "She had me on her deathbed be happy without her, else she could not be happy."

"He, too, would have wished it," she said.

"And there is no more of the convent," said I.

"I thought you would not love me," said she. "I would have carried a broken heart to the healer of such."

"You heavenly woman!" I said. Black and White.

LOOK BEFORE YOU EAT.

The Hungry Man Who Got Into a High-Price Restaurant.

Exceedingly small is a restaurant in New York City, the sidewalk it appears to be a mere pretentious "hole in the wall." It is fitted up in a grotesque fashion that is not designed to impress the passer-by with an idea of elegance or extravagance.

The hungry man is lured across the threshold by the appetizing odors that permeate the atmosphere thereabout, by its appearance of cleanliness and originality, and its cloud of tobacco smoke, which lend enchantment.

The majority of men who frequent this place are well-to-do wholesale dealers in a certain line.

One night last week a young man with a big appetite and with exactly 69 cents in his pocket entered this beguiling place. All unconsciously he walked right into the yawning mouth of the enemy—straight into the jaws of death! He was seated and handed a menu by a waiter, who quickly disappeared.

In the interval that followed, while the attendant brought the small pieces of silver, the water and the bread and butter, the man at the table stared with unbelieving horror at the bill of fare in his hand. He started, held tighter to the menu and passed his limp hand across his brow, as he read:

Steak steak (single portion).....$1.25
Small tenderloin steak.....$1.00
Porterhouse steak.....$1.50

Thoroughly alive to the desperation of his situation, he pulled himself together and proceeded to run up the column of prices on the bill with the rapidity of an accountant. After diligent search he came to "15 cents." He ran his finger back across the line, "Coffee!"

The next amount within his limit was 50 cents. With the eagerness of desperation he followed the fine back. Scrambled eggs! His soul revolted. That was the one thing he hated.

"Waiter!" he exclaimed, suddenly—so suddenly that the waiter winced, "how long will it take you to get me a porterhouse steak with mushrooms—well done?"

"Twenty minutes, sir."

"Twenty minutes, eh? Well, let me think."

He leisurely took out his watch. There came a calculating gleam in his eyes.

"Man alive!" he exclaimed, wildly, as he bounded to his feet. "Why, it's half-past seven now! I haven't a moment to waste. My hat, please! Grand Central 7:55—catch a train—no time to eat!"

It was a magnificent bit of acting. He had gone.

At a restaurant around the corner he sank into a chair at the nearest table. "Just saved my life," he murmured to himself. "Waiter, bring me a small steak, with fried potatoes, and a cup of coffee."

His bill was 35 cents.

Performs and the Voice.

French scientists have been making experiments in regard to the effect of certain perfumes upon the voice. Many of the most successful teachers in singing have cautioned their pupils stringently against the use of perfumes or the proximity of odorous flowers. Some masters go so far as to forbid their pupils the use of any perfumes at all, and if one of them is detected wearing a bunch of perfumes the lesson is postponed.

The perfume of the violet has been found by the use of the laryngoscope to be particularly injurious.

A PIG IN A POKE.

Buying a pig in a poke is the proverbial expression for a purchase of something whose value is unknown.

No one who buys Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is purchasing a medicine of unproved or doubtful value. It always helps. It almost always cures. Thousands of men and women who have been cured by the use of this medicine testify to a perfect restoration of health and strength by its use.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It cures dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach and other forms of disease particularly known as stomach trouble. It builds up the body with firm flesh, not fatty fat.

About ten years ago I began to be afflicted with catarrh of the stomach, also diarrhea," writes Mr. Wm. Walters, of Antrim, Mo. "Was troubled so often that I sometimes thought my end had come. Tried many remedies, but they gave only temporary relief. In November 1899, thought I would try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I got six bottles and took five in succession, then thought I would wait for a time and take the one left. Soon found I had symptoms of the trouble coming back, so took the sixth bottle and it cured me. I have enjoyed the best of health this summer, and the credit all belongs to your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I can't say more. Words cannot express what I suffered, the trouble was so severe."

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach, blood and lungs.

MARTHA M. WILLIAMS.

HELEN came in quietly, banging the door behind her. Miss Prue only sighed—she was too gentle to scold.

She had opened her heart as well as her house to her brother's orphaned daughter, who had come to her with a moving tale of a stepfather's cruelty and hardness. Helen had at first been as winning as the south wind. Latterly Miss Prue had been finding out that there was something to be said on the stepfather's side.

Helen had a conscience, but it was active only in regard to her own wrongs. All her pity and sympathy went out to herself, for what she called her mother's neglect of her and the shameful spite of Fate in making her poor, when she herself knew she was meant to be rich.

She did not speak until she had thrust the cat from in front of the fire and set her feet upon the fender. As Miss Prue rang for lights, Helen said over her shoulder: "Such a mess! Aunt Prue, why didn't you tell me to expect."

"How come it? I do not visit the Jilsons." Miss Prue said, involuntarily lifting her head. The Jilsons were loud, newly rich people, who had bought the Apple place six months back, and had been bent on dazzling their neighbors ever since.

"You must have known what this kettle-drum would be—and how it would go—slow and nasty and sticky—like cold molasses," Helen protested. Miss Prue gave her a searching look, and answered: "Please remember, Helen, you choose to make friends with the Jilsons over my protest. I was sorry to have you do it, but not sorry to find you caviling at their ways. They were eager to accept."

"I was not the only one to accept; my paragon, Robby Walters, was there—doing everything for every body," Helen retorted. "What is more, your other paragon was at his heels most of the time."

"If you mean Jane Manners, she could not very well stay away. You know the Jilsons offered to get up this entertainment for the help of her poor people," Miss Prue said, flushing a little. "Jane asked me what to do. She hated to accept their offer, but how could she refuse with winter at hand and money so badly needed?"

"Oh, I see! Your exclusiveness and fine breeding are for sale—in sweet charity's name!" Helen sneered. "Well, they fetched a good price. Little Jilson shouted loud enough for everybody to hear: 'The tables were shore to make a hundred dollars—and all clear gain—paw had done paid for."

"YOU CAN'T MIMIC YOUR HOSTS IN MY HOUSE."

the music and the refreshments, besides such halcyon talk."

"Please stop, Helen! You cannot mimic your hosts in my house," Miss Prue said.

Helen sprang up, her eyes blazing. "You will end by making me hate you, Aunt Prue!" she cried, stamping her foot. "You care nothing for me—your own flesh and blood. You won't help me the least bit. You could help me—O, so much! You had better do it! Unless I marry Robby Walters I won't take anybody! There—it's all out! You have known all along, yet have done your best to keep him away from me. I believe you want him to take that money Manners thing instead."

She broke down into stormy sobbing. Miss Prue's hands clinched upon her knitting needles. She had known—but had never dreamed anything of her own flesh and blood could speak so little like a gentleman. If real love had been back of the outburst she would have been infinitely pitiful toward the outburst. But she knew Helen loved only Robby's fortune.

Robby was the son of Miss Prue's heart—he had loved his father and been thrust from him through foot-liver's quarrel. Robby, orphaned while still in her short frocks, had been brought up by his grandmother, who was Miss Prue's next neighbor. After the grandmother died he lived on in the old homestead, and gave to his Aunt Prue a double measure of devotion.

When Helen came Miss Prue was dreaming beautiful dreams. She was no match-maker, but it did seem as if fate was to give her through these two some part of the joy her youth had missed.

To the vanishing dreams there had succeeded fears—Robby was, after all, a man to be misled. It might be wrecked by splendors of bronze hair, sea-blue eyes and lips as redly dewy as a rose's heart. Helen would have two have turned Robby's head—if there had been no Jane Manners.

Jane was slim and palish, but of fine fiber and as true as steel. Plus, also, a fine unobtrusive way which flouted missions afar, and spent itself ungrudging on the poor, the needy and the benighted at its door.

Mr. Bryson, the young minister just out of the seminary, said Jane was "deplorably narrow." Helen agreed with him. It was one way of flattering his vanity, and aside from a natural love of conquest, Helen wanted to keep him dangling about her as a spur to Bobbie's elation.

Perhaps it was some thought of him that suddenly dried Helen's stormy tears. She flung up her arms and said, steadily: "I mean it, Aunt Prue! Unless you help me you will have me on your hands for good and always. I swear I never will go back to my mother."

Under all Miss Prue's womanliness there was a grain of flint. It struck fire now—her tone was as hard as Helen's when she said: "Not even the risk of matrimony shall make me do the least such a wrong. If anybody must be sacrificed to you let it be me. I am older than Robby by 25 years."

Conceivably Helen called a week after one of her outbreaks. It amazed Miss Prue to find her at breakfast silken and smiling.

"I can never be good, like Jane," she said, a little later, when Bobbie came in to consult with Aunt Prue about a poor sick family. "But I mean to be as good as I can. From what you say there is likely to be need for all the help anybody can give."

"Indeed, there will be," Bobbie said, earnestly. "It is fairly heart-breaking to think of those poor mill folk. Their cottages are so cramped—and fever has sprung up already."

"I cannot help that," Helen said, dropping her eyes; "but I can fetch and carry—and spend Jilson money. O, don't shake your head—they like to have you do it—and people will give me things, if I come for them in a carriage, that would shut their hands tight if I went alone."

"You are right," Bobbie said, laughing.

"I know I am right," Helen pouted. Then she ran away and left him—it was most a week, indeed, before he saw her again.

But he heard of her, and of her works, almost hourly. She had flung herself into charity with all her strength, and found in it some measure of the outlet for her active temperament. Thus, with her hair and green and said, she was a hard-dressed, more charming, Bobbie would certainly have gone down before her if his heart had not been secure in Jane's keeping.

A fine clear December, nipping cold, so helped to check the fever the last case was convalescent when Christmas came. Helen was sitting at her desk, and brought Bobbie something else—something that made his voice ring so happily.

Helen thrilled to hear him say from the well-furrowed depths of his utter: "Jump in! Quick! I'm going to give you a ride I hope you will never forget."

Nestling at his side, Helen's eyes grew full of light. Something was coming—surely, infinitely, he was unlike what he had ever been before. For awhile neither spoke.

Then they drove past the factory. Bobbie laughed, and put his hand peacefully over her, saying softly: "I want to confess my sins, and this is the very time. When you first came I misjudged you—O, shamefully. I thought you were selfish, heartless—ever so many bad things. I still half believe you were, until your good angel scared the ugly traits away."

"Who is the good angel?" Helen asked, smiling softly.

"Love," Bobbie said, boldly. "Helen, fairer than Helen of Troy, confess in your turn, you love."

He broke off with a quick, significant glance. Helen trembled as she half whispered:

"The man who loves you better than all the world—the man who would have told you so months back, but for my mistake."

"I do not understand," Helen said, dropping her eyes.

Bobbie laughed triumphantly. "O, yes, you do," he said. "Of course, I'm horribly impertinent—more impertinent than when I persuaded him you were flirting—but please say you'll marry Bryson when the bishop comes to marry Jane and myself. It was only last night she would make me a positive promise. I've been so happy ever since I'm audacious enough to do anything."

Helen rallied bravely. "You are audacious," she said, with just the least head breath; then, smiling brightly: "Let me forgive you, all one thing. You should never have undertaken to court me by proxy for anything under the bishop himself. He is, I hear, a bachelor, and very rich."

"Bryson will be a bishop—he is worth ten of the other," Robby protested. Helen shut her eyes, giving suddenly white. Six months ago, the very day the bishop, about the same time Rev. Edward Bryson sailed for the China missions—Boston Globe.

Mayor Mulvihill, the workmanlike chief magistrate of Bridgeport, Conn., prevented the marriage of a young woman to her parents' choice. The would-be groom applied for a license, but the marriage license clerk had some doubts as to the girl being of age, so he refused to give her the license. His honor asked them some questions, and being satisfied that the girl was acting foolishly told her to go home and consult with her parents before taking such an important step. Neither of the parties lives in Bridgeport and the mayor was convinced that it was a love marriage, which he reluctantly refused to countenance.

VOTING CONTEST

The Most Popular Lady in Christian County to Be Determined By Ballot.

The Winner Will Be Awarded a Set of Furniture worth $100.

A VOTING contest was begun August 29, for four months, to determine by popular vote the most popular lady in Christian County. To the lady receiving the highest number of votes, we will present an elegant set of bedroom furniture, now on exhibition at Pyle & Gaietta's. It is of quartered oak, of the finest make and latest style, and is worth $100. The contest will close at 12 o'clock, noon, Monday, December 29, 1923. The plan will be as follows:

Every subscriber to the Kentuckian who pays back dues or cash in advance will be entitled to cast one vote for each five cents paid. That is to say, a subscriber who pays $2.00 will have 40 votes, one who pays $1.00 will have 20 votes and so on for any amount large or small. In every paper published there will be a coupon and these coupons when cut out and brought or sent to the office will represent each one vote. A subscriber will also have the privilege of gathering up coupons clipped by friends from their papers and voting them one at a time, or by the hundred if preferred. One will also have the privilege of buying papers at the office at five cents each and voting the coupons cut from them.

The coupon ballots will be deposited in a ballot box with two keys. One of these keys will be held by County Judge W. T. Fowler and the other by Mayor Jouett Henry. The box will be opened not oftener than once a week, all ballots then in it taken out, counted and certified to, sealed up in an envelope and replaced in the ballot box. The envelope will contain a statement of the votes in it, so that its contents will not need to be counted again until the official count at the close of the contest.

The last week of the contest the ballots may be deposited without showing them, so that the close of the contest may be secret and exciting to the end.

JOKED WITH VICTIMS.

Burglar Enters an Editor's Bed Room and Robs Him.

Clinton, Ia., Nov. 3.—Last night a burglar entered the residence of C. A. Fay, editor of the Advertiser, took a pistol from under Fay's head, struck a match, lighted the gas, covered Fay and his wife with the gun and compelled them to give up money and diamonds valued at $1,300. The robber was cool and joked with his victims considerably. After getting the valuables the robber backed out of the room, shut the door and escaped. There is no clue.

Jim Richardson's panic stricken appeal on the eve of the election, probably saved John Rhea's scalp. Jim is an old hand at the political bellows and he went upon the idea that the only sure way to make Democrats vote is to get them mad or scared.

J. H. Boatner, is jail at Hartford, charged with conspiracy to defraud the American Express Company, has filed suit against the company, C. J. Abbott, its route agent, and A. B. Only a few days ago we read of the robbery of an Iowa editor of $1,300 by a burglar who entered his house at night. Now comes the news that Will Cooper, a boy at Fulton, is under arrest for robbing the mail box of the Fulton Leader, of money estimated at several hundred dollars, which Editor Mott Ayers, presumably, never missed from his current receipts. Reports like these are liable to cause the avaricious trust magnate to make a football rust for journalism.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

All Stuffed Up

That's the condition of many sufferers from catarrh, especially in the morning. Great difficulty is experienced in clearing the head and throat.

No wonder catarrh causes headache, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, pollutes the breath, discharges the stomach and affects the entire system.

To cure catarrh, treatment must be constitutional—alterative and tonic. I have cured many cases. I took medicines of different kinds, giving each a fair trial; but gradually grew sicker until I could hardly look, taste or smell. I then concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after taking four bottles I was cured and have not had any return of the disease since." EUGENE JONES, Lebanon, Ky.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures catarrh—its soothes and strengthens the mucous membrane and builds up the whole system.

The small majority of 1200 out of a registered majority of 6,000 in Louisville, bears out the charge that thousands of Republicans registered as Democrats for the purpose of voting in the proposed Democratic primary for the weakest candidate for Governor next year. As the registration books are the basis of qualification, there is no way to prevent this fraud, nor is there any way to admit the thousands of unregistered Democratic votes. In Hopkinsville alone 300 Democrats could not vote in a primary to nominate a state ticket.

The Jefferson county assessor has filed a report assessing the Louisville Water Company at $4,000,000 for five years back and calling for the payment of $20,000 back taxes. The assessment is made under the corporation and franchise laws. The payment of the taxes will be resisted in the courts, upon the ground that the company is owned almost entirely by the city.

STRANGER UNIDENTIFIED.

Body Sent to a Medical College for Dissection May be a Lunatic.

The stranger who was killed at Empire Thursday was sent to a Louisville Medical College without being identified. He resembled a young man named Moore, a son of M. C. Moore, of Springfield, Tenn., but the latter came to this city and said the man was not his son, who was much younger. Besides young Moore was communicated with and found to be alive.

Sunday it was learned that a patient named Rodebaugh, who escaped from the asylum the night before the Empire tragedy, had not arrived at his home in Hopkinsville county and it is possible that he was the man killed. Dr. W. A. Lackey, accompanied by a brother of the missing patient, went to Louisville Sunday night to see if the corpse could be identified. The result has not been learned.

Game is said to be quite plentiful near their camping grounds and the prospects are good for a successful outing.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys are your blood purifiers. They filter out the waste or impurities in the blood. If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pain, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidneys. Kidney trouble causes quick or uneasy heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is overworking in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble. If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It is the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail. Send 3c to Dr. Kilmer, free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Benton, Ky., Nov. 7.—In an altercation today Rev. T. J. Walton, of this place, seriously if not fatally stabbed C. A. Cann, a tenant who works on the former's farm near Briensburg. There has been bad feeling between the two parties since last spring, when the divine chased Mr. Cann over the farm with a double barreled shotgun and when they met today, while Rev. Walton was riding over the place, the trouble was renewed, with the result that Mr. Cann received two bad cuts, one across the face and the other under the shoulder.

JAS. H. FARRELL, A PROMINENT CHICAGO MAN

And the Oldest Member of the Illinois House of Representatives Makes a Recommendation.

James H. Farrell of Chicago is one of the best known figures in the Democratic politics of that city. For years he has been Marshal of the famous Cook County Democracy Marching Club, which has participated in Democratic campaigns in half the states of the union, and which went to New York especially to assist in the election of Mayor Van Wyck.

Capt. Farrell is the oldest member of the Illinois House of Representatives in point of service, having been a member continuously since 1887. His constituents have elected him eight times. He has been a leader in that body from the beginning of his career and is one of the best known figures in Illinois politics.

Capt. Farrell is 59 years of age and one of the best preserved men for his years in the Illinois Legislature, despite his arduous and constant duties in that body. Mr. Farrell is engaged in the real estate business in Chicago. Under date of March 14, 1901, he writes as follows:

COLORADO DEMOCRATS.

Republican Efforts to Unseat Friends of Senator Will Cause a Deadlock.

Denver, Nov. 7.—Practically complete returns have now been received from every county in the State, and they show that the legislature will stand on joint ballot according to the face of the returns, Democrats 54, Republicans 46.

The indications now are there will be contests against many members of the legislature outside of Arapahoe county and against all three of the congressmen shown to have been elected.

At a caucus today of a number of Democratic members of the new legislature it was decided that if the Republicans undertake to unseat Teller men in the House, the Senate, which is strongly Democratic, shall not meet in joint with the House and shall deadlock the legislature so that it would be impossible to elect a successor to Senator Teller.

Safety Dress Recently Invented, Withstands Currents of Great Power.

Experiments have been made with Prof. Artemieff's safety-dress, in the high-tension laboratory of Messrs.

Siemens and Halska. (This dress is constructed entirely of fine but thickly woven wire gauze. In completely incloses the wearer, inclusive of hands, feet and head. Its total weight is 3.3 pounds, its resistance from hand to hand, 0.117 ohms, and its capacity varies from .0002 up to

.00025 microfarads, according as the wearer is far away from or nearer to a wall. The cooling surface is so great that a current of 200 amperes can pass through the dress for some seconds from hand to hand without perceptible heating effect. Standing uninsulated on the ground, and clad with this dress, Prof. Artemieff drew sparks from the secondary terminals of a transformer which was giving a tension of 75,000 volts, the period being 50 cycles per second.

He next seized the main, and later on,

the potential being raised to 150,000 volts, he drew sparks from both terminals, and handled the latter.

The machine supplying this transformer was of 170 kilowatt capacity.

In concluding the experiments the inventor short-circuited this generator

by clutching hold of the terminals, the potential difference between the two being 1,000 volts, and the current passed 200 amperes. The circuit was broken by simply letting go of one electrode. Throughout these experiments Prof. Artemieff declared he felt not the slightest sensation of any current through his body.—Eng-

SKILLFUL BIRD DOGS.

And Some of the Terms in Use Among Hunters.

Roading denotes that a dog is following a trail toward the birds by the footstep, as a man in an analogous manner might follow a flock of sheep

by watching their tracks. Drawing denotes that a dog is approaching birds by the scent in the air, as a man might follow a flock of sheep by the long line of dust hovering over and around the trail. Drawing is considered a much superior manner to roading. It is commonly marked by greater accuracy, quickness of execution and dash of manner. Pointing is the act which the dog makes when he has definitely located the birds, or when he thinks he has done so. If the preliminary pause to accurately determine the whereabouts of the hidden birds before he springs to capture. If he misjudges and springs in the wrong direction, all his pains and labor come to nothing. In his training he is encouraged to point, and is prohibited springing, so that after a time he makes his point and holds it steadily. If by any act, willful or otherwise, he alarms the birds, and they take wing, it is called a flush.

If the dog, when going up wind or game, flushes the birds, he commits an error; if under certain circumstances he flushes when going down wind the error may be excused on the ground that, being up wind of them, it was impossible to scent them, and,

therefore, impossible to know their presence.—Ounting.

THE SEVEN GOLDEN CITIES.

A Popular Legend of the Latter Part of the Dark Ages.

The "Seven Golden Cities," one of the most popular legends of the latter part of the dark ages, were said to be situated on an island west of the African coast. The island is represented as abounding in gold, with magnificent houses and temples,

"the high towers of which shown at a great distance." The legend also relates that at the time of the conquest of Spain and Portugal by the Moors, when the inhabitants fled in every direction to escape slavery, seven bishops, followed by a great number of people, took to ships and put boldly out on the high seas. After losing about for some time, they landed on an unknown island, the famous spot which in after years became the seat of the "Seven Golden Cities."

"This island," Heylyn says, "was exactly in midocean." After all had landed safely, the wise old bishops burned the ships to prevent their followers from deserting, and founded the cities which have become so famous in song and story. The mysterious island was often sought by the early navigators. Those who went in search of it and never returned were popularly believed to have been delivered by its inhabitants.

The Poultry Market.

Kansas City, Nov. 1.—Poultry market continues firm on all grades; small springs very scarce; few being received.
Market well supplied on hens which are a trifle slower. Some being sent in by shippers for spring. Turkeys firm but market latter part of week was pretty well supplied.

St. Louis, Nov. 1.—Receipts of heavy young chickens and old hens quite liberal, demand only moderate, coarse stock moved slowly, and prices $\frac{1}{2}$ ¢ lower.
Light young chick, however, in good demand, with offerings inadequate and values well maintained. Turkeys in liberal supply, slow and lower with buyers discriminating against poor and thin stock. Ducks firm; geese steady.

New York, Nov. 1.—Week opened in dressed poultry market steady but with rather heavy offerings of poor quality; later, however, some improvement.
Chickens became more active and value firmer while fowls continued steady. Receipts throughout week were liberal.
A good week was had in live siding week followed Jewish holidays of Oct. 24 and 25. East side dealers had stocked up so as to have enough left to carry them through the first few days of the following week. Next Hebrew holiday falls on Dec. 25. Receipts of live poultry for week are estimated at 35 cars and with nothing carried over, conditions were more favorable to receivers and and while trade was not active they held their value firmly.

Cincinnati, Nov. 1.—Good firm feeling apparent all week. Receipts have fallen off and demand is good, especially on light weight springers. Fancy turkeys are wanted and supply of geese is limited. Hens and roosters steady. Ducks only moderate.
Good prospects for next week.

Pittsburg, Nov. 1.—Most important feature in poultry past week, was an over supply of live chickens, and much lower prices.
Most sales within past few days made at 9¢/10¢ lb. Effect of these low prices will no doubt be to increase consumption and current receipts as shippers can do better elsewhere. Generally expected that the market will clean up and do better coming week.
Young fat turkeys and ducks scarce.

Chicago, Nov. 1.—Steady. Receipts good but not larger than needed. Considerable portion of receipts now consist of turkeys and geese. Live turkeys meeting with a fair demand. Live spring chicks in good demand and fair supply and firm. Ducks both old and young, in fair supply and demand. White ducks preferred. Weather not cold enough to ship dry packed poultry to advantage.

Philadelphia, Nov. 1.—Live dull and no change to note.
large sizes in fair call. Supplies ample for demand. Dressed fowls lower, Western lost $\frac{1}{2}$ ¢ and Southwestern closed around 11¢/12¢. Supplies more liberal.
Market dull, favors buyers.
Minneapolis, Nov. 1.—Receipts fair and market has held steady all week. Choice turkeys in sharp demand, but bulk of arrivals lately have been small and thin, and have moved out rather slowly. Hens and spring chicks steady. Ducks and geese dull.

Denver Nov. 1.—Market conditions much improved over last week. Large percentage of surplus stock has been worked off and prices have reacted some.
Hens and springs thither, good demand. Supply of all poultry very light, hardly enough stock for market. General tendency is to higher prices.

Buffalo, Nov. 1.—Supply only sufficient to meet daily demand and prices well maintained for good birds of any kind, poor flesh and light weights hard to sell at low prices. Better inquiry for turkeys as season advances.

TALE OF TWO DOGS.

How Newcomer Taught Old Fellow To
coming Modesty

Bill Morgan used to own a pup, in which all breeds were well mixed up, a hump-eyed, yellow sort of cur, with feet and sandhairs in its fur. It was a scraper in its way and licked some dogs most every day, and it, in course of time, did reach the verdict that it was a peach.

It used to loaf around the town and show its teeth and wear a frown, and every now and then 't would wail:
"Why won't some dog step on my tail, or bite my ear, or bark or growl, or look me in the face and howl?
Are all the dogs devoid of snap? I'm simply spoiling for a scrap."

One day a bulldog came to town;
it was a sort of brindle brown, with bandy legs and sawed-off tail, and teeth that would eat through a nail.
Its face was scratched, its eyes were sore, its tongue was like a cellar door.
It paddled up the village streets as though in search of stuff to eat, and when the mongrel saw it come the latter cried: "A scrap, by gum! Now, doggies, spe me go and mus- the stufing out of yonder cuss; I'll teach the ugly, lop-eared clown to push himself into this town."

The mongrel, with upstanding wool, jumped then upon the vagrant bulldog, and then there came a cloud of dust, a crack as though some bone had bust, a shriek, a moan, a sickening thud, a gentle rain of fur and blood; and then the bulldog took his way, and nodded to the dogs "Good day." The mongrel had been scattered round so all the chunks were never found; Bill Morgan scraped up what he could and planted them out in the wood.

ONE-LINE AUTHORS.

Writers Whose Fame Rests Upon a Single Book or Quotation.

It is one of the many odd experiences of life that, while some men in pursuit of fame write a library of books and the and are forgotten, other men, under some happy inspiration, write a single line, poem or volume, and are forever ranked with the immortals.

In some cases immortality goes a-begging from the modest shrinking of an author to the claim of his obscure, as in the case of the oracle who penned the eloquent word
"Don't" in answer to Punch's request for advice to those about to marry.

Very few read Congreve nowadays, and fewer still could quote half a dozen lines from any of his poems and dramas; and yet to many who have never even heard his name there are few quoted lines more familiar than the oft-quoted and misquoted:
"Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast."

Charles Wolfe, the Irish divine and poet, wrote many poems of excellence, but only one redeems him and all his works from obscurity, and of this few could get beyond the first line: "We buried him darkly at dead of night."

Thomas Gray has left one legacy only from all his writings, but that is an imperishable one—his "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," the most widely quoted poem in our language. Yet those who could probably recite every word of it could probably not even give the name of a single other poem by the same writer.

Lady Anne Barnard would have no place at all in the public memory if she had not written "Auld Robin Gray."

A Year's Food for a Menagerie.

In 1901 the animals in Regents park menagerie, London, consumed 104 tons of horseflesh, a little over eight tons of goats' flesh, ten tons of whiting, nearly a ton of flounders, a half ton of rough fish, 1,260 pints of shrimps, and close on 10,000 fowl heads. From the corn merchant came 150 loads of clover, 144 loads hay, 238 loads of straw, 185 quarters of oats, 34 quarters of barley, 39 quarters of wheat and three tons of oil cake. The game birds took, among other things, 62 quarters of maize and seven quarters of buckwheat, while for the seed-eaters were provided 24 quarters of canary, 11 quarters of hemp, eight quarters of rape and eight quarters of millet. The baker furnished 6,202 quarter loaves and 15 tons of biscuit; and from the dairy came 5,086 quarts of milk and 33,300 eggs, or nearly 100 for every day in the year. The grocer sent 206 tins preserved milk, 498 pounds of sugar, 321 pounds of raisins, 111 pounds of currants, 159 pounds of figs and 39 pots of Liebig. The fruiter and others contributed largely to the menu.

"PECK'S BAD BOY."

Musical Farce Comedy With No Equal as Fun Producers.

There are but few persons who are unacquainted with "Peck's Bad Boy." Those who have not seen him personally have no doubt read the book. As presented at Holland's Opera House, next Thursday night, Nov. 13, there will be many improvements, new jokes and original pranks. It is a musical farce comedy that has no equal as a producer of fun and fun only.

Mr. Will St. Auburn, manager of the Southern and Western companies of "Peck's Bad Boy," in company with a number of other well known managers who were met in consultation at the Hoffman House, New York City, speaking of the peculiar experiences that fall to the lot of the profession in general, related the following amusing little incident. "While playing in a town in New Hampshire last winter, the manager of the theatre met me on the street and said, 'I don't believe you'll do very good here tonight, because the last show played here didn't have any heat in the opera house, and my people will not turn out unless the house is comfortable.' It embarrassed me for a minute, but I finally asked him how much it would cost to heat the house, and whether he burned wood or coal. He said he could buy a cord of wood for a dollar, so the bargain was closed about heating the house, but I remarked, 'How are we to let the people know that the house will be warm?' 'Leave that to me,' remarked the local manager. About noontime my attention was called to twelve boys who were carrying banners, and ahead of the boys was the local manager ringing a bell and calling out 'Hot Opera Tonight!' It is needless to say that we had a crowded house that night."
